Fund Manager

Neil Veitch

It is tempting to view the events of the last twelve months as so traumatic and extreme that they are unlikely to be repeated.

However, history dictates that not only will the market recover but that, at some time in the future we will once again be confronted by similar circumstances. Fear and greed are the most basic of human emotions and whereas it is now abundantly clear that the latter was driving investor behaviour for most of the last two to three years, the former has now firmly taken hold. Not only are investors 'scared' to take new positions, but companies are 'scared' to invest, and banks are 'scared' to lend. The collapse of Lehman Brothers led to a savage deleveraging where stocks, particularly small and mid-caps, were sold-off regardless of fundamentals.

Thankfully, after a period of relative inaction policymakers across the globe appear to have finally recognised the magnitude of the situation and, at least for the time being, look to be 'ahead of the curve'. Recent stimulus packages from the world's central banks will likely ensure that the world economy does not take a further lurch downward thereby providing support for markets. However, there will be no easy path back to non-inflationary growth; rather we are likely to see a pro-longed period of sub-trend growth. Despite the challenging economic backdrop we believe stocks can deliver excellent returns.

With fear remaining the dominant emotion, the inertia of the majority of investors continues to throw up considerable opportunities. Not only are a number of our holdings significantly undervalued but the ongoing volatility provides excellent entry points. We are now being afforded the opportunity to invest in many companies that we have owned previously (and sold at considerably higher prices) at what we believe are very attractive levels. For instance the Fund has recently taken positions in Laird Plc, C&C, Cookson Plc and SIG Plc at prices a fraction of those prevailing eighteen months ago. The last twelve months have been exceptionally challenging but we continue to believe the fund has considerable upside.
