Fund Manager

Neil Veitch

Twelve months ago we commented on the fear that was dominating market psychology and the considerable opportunity that this afforded. Since then, both stock markets and economies have recovered strongly. During this period your Fund performed exceptionally well and was the number one ranked fund in the UK All-Companies sector, rising 101.4% versus the FTSE-All Share Index up 30.1%.

The opportunities that could be found when confidence in UK equities hit rock-bottom no longer exist. However, we still continue to generate investment ideas through fundamental analysis and careful stock-picking. For instance, we believe that UK Industrial companies are likely to deliver significant earnings upgrades during the upcoming year as a result of weaker sterling, reduced cost-bases, and recovering demand. As these companies are often leaders in their specific markets, they may be attractive to larger US firms that are struggling to deliver organic growth. Despite the sharp recovery in many industrial stocks over the last twelve months your Fund continues to run an overweight position. In general, we continue to be positioned pro-cyclically with additional overweight positions in oil & gas and technology. The Fund is underweight domestic earnings – where we expect any recovery to be relatively muted – and basic resources where we think the risk/reward is less attractive than in other cyclical sectors. We continue to believe that the return of M&A activity will provide further support to the market and the Fund in particular. Indeed, in the period post year end, one of the funds larger holdings, Gulfsands Petroleum, announced that it had received an unsolicited takeover approach.

Looking at the wider equity market, valuations do not look extended, with the All-Share currently trading on a forward PE of c.11x. It is also worth remembering that equity markets are still some way off the peak levels reached during 2007. However, as the year progresses, some investors are likely to become increasingly focused on their 'exit' strategies as they look to lock-in some of the profits achieved during the recent recovery. This may cause further short-term volatility, but can also provide an opportunity for investors looking for those stocks which offer fundamental good value and growth.
